HEART HANDS, 2024: Chris Breidenbach

Chris Breidenbach's photo of one of his daughters showing some love on a warm, breezy day is a great shot worth sharing again.

East Troy is a happening place with a rich history

The area of East Troy was first settled in 1836, when a man named H. Roberts began construction of a sawmill on the shores of Honey Creek.

The area grew rapidly, and the next four years saw the establishment of a hotel, general store, blacksmith, chapel, school, post office, doctor, lawyer, and justice of the peace.

East Troy was originally known as Troy after a place called Troy, New York, from where many of the settlers originated. It was decided, during 1843, that Troy was too large of an area for one township, and the territory of Troy was split by the state legislature. The western part was renamed Meacham, after an early settler and the eastern part remained Troy.

This arrangement was deemed unsuitable to the western portion, including Jesse Meacham, for which the area was named. Meacham set out for the capital to reclaim the name of Troy.

There is a legend that Jacob Burgit, an early settler and representative of the eastern territory, heard of Meacham's trip, and set out for the capital to argue his own case for keeping the name of Troy for the east. However, Burgit arrived too late, and the name of Troy was given to the west. The east was then renamed East Troy, as it remains today.

The Village of East Troy was officially platted in 1847. All the land south of main street belonged to Burgit, who purchased the claim in 1837, built the sawmill, and later built a grist mill, which helped to develop flourishing business in the area. Austin McCracken owned all the land north of the Main Street. McCracken came to East Troy in 1836 and built the first public inn in Walworth County. This public inn was built of log and was in the

LIFE THROUGH THE LENS

Through the years, area residents have been offered the chance to share their views of the East Troy area through the lens of their cameras for an annual photo contest.

This year, we decided to change things up – still featuring photos submitted by area residents but choosing the best ones from the East Troy Community Guide in the years 2021-2024 that did not appear as cover photos.

Photos featured in this edition were submitted during those years by: Chris Breidenbach, John Finney, Barbara Jeffries, Roberta Moeller, and Marie Molleson.

The photographers who submit photos showcase the people, places, and events that give this area its color. The East Troy Times wants to once again thank them for sharing their photographs.

Photographs chosen were selected based on subject matter, visual appeal, and connection to the East Troy area, while also aiming to offer a variety.

ON THE COVER:

same site where the East Troy House now stands.

In an effort to stimulate growth in the community, Burgit and McCracken offered a free lot to anyone who would build there. They set aside land for churches, a public square, and parks.

The village square is now a centerpiece for the community for a variety of events from festivals and fundraisers to concerts and holiday gatherings.

The first postal service in East Troy was established in 1838, in the home of Henry Powers, who lived not far from Potter's Lake. John F. Powers was the village's first postmaster, as well as the first attorney. Mail was at first transported by horseback and delivered to East Troy once a week.

In 1841, the post office was moved to the village and by that time the Government Road from Milwaukee to Janesville was established, facilitating mail services. Many historical buildings around the Village Square housed the post office through the years. On June 12, 1966, ceremonies were held for the new post office on Mill Street, which is still its home today.

On Dec. 13, 1907, the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light Company opened a line into the village creating much needed business, ease of travel from Milwaukee and other stops along the railway and freight of mail, farm produce, newspapers, and most importantly a new service that residents had never seen before, electricity.

Now, the rail line that runs between East Troy and The Elegant Farmer in Mukwonago is the last remnant of the Milwaukee Electric Railway system.
